St. Peter's Church (1899-1917) and Archdeacon Greene

In 1898, construction began on St. Peter's Anglican Church. It was located strategically on Giant's Head Road (halfway between the Gartrell and Barclay ranches). The church was built and financed by the workers at the two ranches.

The church's cemetery, originally known as The Church of England Cemetery, was located adjacent to the church and opened in 1908. The first burial was of Arthur James Preston. This cemetery contains the remains of many of these ranch owners and workers.

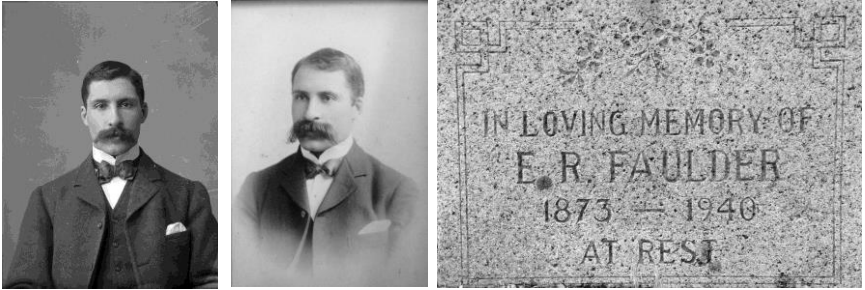

Some of Summerland's earliest pioneers were classmates and/or residents of Harrow School, Middlesex England. George Barclay, also from Middlesex England, advertised positions at his cattle ranch, and these classmates came to Canada and became pupils of Barclay's cattle ranch. They built St. Peter's Church, and several of these lifelong friends are buried in this cemetery, including Will Fosbery, Richard Turner, Bob Faulder, and Harry Dunsdon.

Every fifth Sunday, Archdeacon Thomas Greene (1849-1935) travelled from Kelowna to provide religious services at St. Peter's Church. He would stay overnight at the Gartrell's home during his visit. Archdeacon Thomas Green began his religious services in the Okanagan Valley in 1893. In 1916, he was appointed Archdeacon of the Okanagan. In 1935, Greene retired, and he died later that year.

In 1910, a new and larger Anglican Church (St. Stephen's) was built in Summerland's downtown. The older church was used as a community and youth centre from 1910 until 1917. On May 17, 1917, while people were burning weeds near the church, the wind shifted and the church was destroyed.
